Gradeup, an edtech startup in India that operates an exam preparation platform for undergraduate and postgraduate-level courses, has raised $7 million from Times Internet as it looks to expand its business in the country.Gradeup started as a community for students to discuss their upcoming exams, and help one another with solving questions, said Shobhit Bhatnagar, co-founder and CEO of Gradeup, in an interview with TechCrunch.Some courses are free and some are paid,while those functionalities continue to be available on the platform,

Gradeup has expanded in the last year to offer online courses from teachers to help students prepare for exams. These courses, depending on their complexity and duration, cost anywhere between Rs 5,000 ($70) and Rs 35,000 ($500).These are live lectures that are designed to replicate the offline experience. Students can interact with the teacher through a chat room. Each class also has a “student success rate” team assigned to it that follows up with each student to check if they had any difficulties in learning any concept and take their feedback.

These extra efforts have helped Gradeup see more than 50% of its students finish their courses.Each year in India, more than 30 million students appear for competitive exams. A significant number of these students enroll themselves to tuitions and other offline coaching centers.Gradeup has amassed more than 15 million registered students who have enrolled to live lectures. The startup plans to use the fresh capital to expand its academic team to 100 faculty members (from 50 currently) and 200 subject matters and reach more users in smaller cities and towns in India. Students even in smaller cities and towns are paying a hefty amount of fee and are unable to get access to high-quality teachers, this is exactly void Gradeup is filling.
